The Technology behind Bitcoin. If you look at the original white paper of Bitcoin, you will notice that their invention is a solution to the double spending problem. The double spending problem occurs when a transaction is broadcast to the network, but another transaction to the same address has already been broadcast. While it may seem like a minor detail, this slight increase in computational expense is cost prohibitive for most use cases for private transactions. In order to solve the problem, Bitcoin permits an identity to be digitally signed on a message using a private key. Each digital signature is stored on a chain of blocks referred to as the blockchain. The blockchain makes the process of double spending so difficult that, as of May 2020, the entire Bitcoin network has never double spent a transaction. If you were to go back in time, you would find that every Bitcoin transaction ever made could be traced back to the original transaction that created it. Any amount of work, even a trivial amount of work, would allow an individual to use their computational resources to create a digital signature on a message that is linked to the transaction. Satoshi implemented a digital signature with SHA-256, a 128-bit cryptographic hash function, and noted in their white paper that the digital signature was nothing more than a hash of a public key and some data. Blockchain Technology. In the early part of this decade, the research was being done to expand the blockchain technology and its capabilities. One of the key ideas that came out of this research was the idea of a block time. Satoshi mentioned a block time of 10 minutes in their white paper, but many experiments in 2016 showed that the number of blocks per second was in the range of 10 to 100. A block time of 10 minutes was too slow for most purposes, but they needed to find a block time that could be sustained for a long period of time. Another idea that would find its way into the research was the concept of mining. For every block, a miner would take their CPU and attempt to find a valid block. The miner would find a valid block approximately every 10 minutes. The first two hours are referred to as a genesis block. If Bitcoin had been a physical currency, this would have been the first transaction. Satoshi had the idea to make a transaction that cannot be traced back to any person, this is known as the pseudonymity of Bitcoin. The idea for public key cryptography as a solution to the double spending problem came from another highly respected person in the cryptographic community, Whitfield Diffie. The Turing Award. Reduce "f" key problems Cause: Usually, Photoshop installs correctly without any "f" key problems. But if a "f" key problem occurs, you can work around the problem by using a different key combination. The fix, however, may cause a different problem. Solution: If the "f" key problem occurs, choose another key combination to replace it. For example, the "Enter" key or "Return" key can be used as a substitute for the "f" key. The replacement key combination will not cause a problem in any other function.Q: Are we allowed to discuss the true intent of a specific answer or statement? Often I am asked to find questions and I quickly realise that the question is not what the poster wants it to be. Sometimes the poster is actually asking something else or there is a misunderstanding of what they want. When this happens, I like to write comments and ping the original poster saying something like this: "You're asking this but I think you want to ask this instead" The question may get up voted because it is insightful, but we are not allowed to actually take the question and answer a question that is really the one the poster intended. This has happened a lot so I am just wondering if we are allowed to discuss the true intent of specific answers or statements. If an answer or comment is wrong and then another post comes along and is correct, are we allowed to point out that this is in fact the true answer or intent of the post? What is the policy on this? A: The longer you have been using the site, the more you will learn about the ins-and-outs of the site, the rules to follow and how this site works. The rules we all live by are based on some guidelines: Be nice. (I always say this.) The actual meaning of the question or answer is irrelevant. We all want to help people here. "Hey, I didn
